Gators for The Children's Heart Foundation

The first-ever college student organization to support CHF was formed this past fall at the University of Florida. The group, called Gators for The Children's Heart Foundation, was co-founded by Isabella Camacho and Rachel Sharp; two students who were passionate about raising CHD research funds and spreading awareness on campus. Isabella became passionate about spreading awareness when her little brother was born with a CHD eight years ago. Rachel was introduced to CHF in high school through a close family friend who has a CHD.

"Watching such a little person be so strong was incredibly inspiring," Isabella said. "When I began this journey at UF, I was hoping to start a Congenital Heart Walk in Gainesville to bring awareness to the community, and later realized I could make an even bigger impact by starting an organization dedicated to the cause on campus."

"The positive impression Gators for The Children's Heart Foundation has made in the CHD community is truly incredible and I am honored to have contributed to its establishment at UF," said Rachel.

The group has held several fundraisers on campus, including Change My Heart, to spread awareness and raise money for research. The group is also heading up the first-ever Gainesville Congenital Heart Walk! The walk will take place on March 22nd on the University of Florida campus!

"I am looking forward to seeing the Gainesville and University of Florida communities coming together to combat congenital heart disease," Rachel said about the upcoming walk.

If you or someone you know attends the University of Florida and is interested in joining the student organization, please email them at gatorschf@gmail.com or fill out the membership application.
